🔍 Abstract

Internationalisation of the curriculum (IoC), in its broad definition, encompasses not only the design of content materials, pedagogy and assessment that foster understanding of global perspectives, but also notions of how these elements interact with the local context. Taking a point of departure at the intriguing connection between the concepts of “global” and “local” in IoC, this workshop investigates how global-local interactions are actualised in teaching and learning; why they are crucial to developing graduates as responsible professionals and citizens in our interconnected world.

Our speakers from HKBU, HKU, and HKUST will share their different approaches to connecting the “local” with the “global” in their classroom teaching. You will hear how various approaches were selected or tailored to achieve specific education purposes and/or learning outcomes across multiple disciplines. Upon reflecting on the effectiveness and limitation of the different attempts together with our speakers, you would be able to shape your own approach(es) to cultivating students’ global-local awareness through the design of courses, teaching and learning activities, and assessment methods.

The Join-the-Conversation event will begin with a brief introduction of the UGC-funded cross-institutional project on internationalising teaching and learning and the latest development of its related community of practice, followed by a panel discussion led by teachers from the three partner institutions.
